Is a healthy workplace more productive?

The hidden cost of dirty air in the workplace

In 2010 nearly 190 million work days were lost due to absenteeism, costing the UK economy over £17bn. Germs, dust and other airborne particulates can circulate around the workplace, decreasing the quality of the air we breathe.

Indoor Air Quality and Sick Building Syndrome

Offices with poor air quality not only harbour and recirculate airborne viruses, they also contribute towards symptoms commonly associated with Sick Building Syndrome, which has been known to affect between 20% and 60% of office occupants. Symptoms include:

- Sneezing; stuffy or runny nose
- Fatigue or lethargy
- Headache, dizziness, nausea
- Irritability and forgetfulness.

A unique solution to improve Indoor Air Quality

Now there is a small, silent, efficient air purifier that improves indoor air quality by reducing airborne particulates.

It's called Cleanaer™.

What is Cleanaer?

Cleanaer is an air purifier with multiple applications. Using the technology of electrostatics it provides a safe, silent, long-term solution for improving air quality, removing odours and making the air feel and smell fresher; creating a pleasant working environment.

How does Cleanaer work?

Cleanaer works by gently releasing microscopic particles called Liquid-ions. They float around on the air currents, attracting airborne particulates and locking them down, out of the air.

Cleanaer products:

- Work silently and effectively, 24 hours a day
- Are small and unobtrusive (21cm x 4cm x 4cm in size)
- Inexpensive to use
- Do not use aerosols or release ozone
- Trusted by users and endorsed by the British Allergy Foundation.

Why choose Cleanaer?

- Significantly reduces airborne particulates
- Counteracts malodours including the smell of cigarette smoke, food and bathroom odours
- 1 unit fragrances a room up to 152m³ in size
- Cleanaer even precipitates and locks-down airborne allergens, including dust mite allergen.

Choose Cleanaer to improve the indoor air quality in your office and take the first step towards a happy office, improved productivity and healthier profits.
